

6516206576.txt

Here in the west, satellite radio provides an invaluable service with respect to weather and traffic conditions. Particularly in sparsely populated areas, local radio stations are woefully inadequate with respect to quality and frequency of updates and information. Traveling long distances necessitates continued searching for stations. Reception is frequently very poor. It is a disservice to the consumers who are willing to pay for satellite radio to limit access to road and weather information. Please look out for the best interests of the American public, NOT the special interests of the traditional broadcasters!